The work is based on a series of lectures which for several years past I have offered in courses on economic geology at the University of Minnesota. These lectures have been rewritten and expanded. The material was first prepared some years ago to be included as a chapter in The Principles of Economic Geology, recently issued. The chapter was so large, however, that to have included it would have defeated some of the purposes of that volume. It was withdrawn and rewritten and is offered here. The best results will probably be obtained by omitting much of the material presented for certain fields and emphasizing that relating to other fields, especially those of which the students already have some general knowledge. Within the last few years I have had many opportunities to visit the geologic departments of petroleum engineers and corporations and have been impressed with the large amount of carefully prepared data which they possess.
